1. A Czechoslovak Army gasoline dump is located near the village of Domasin not far from the Domasin railway station. It is hidden in the woods and is completely fenced in. A side track connects the dump with the main rail line. Security is maintained by an army unit (number of men unknown) which is housed in the area. This dump was built before World War II by the Czechoslovak Ministry of War and was enlarged considerably during the German occupation. Capacity of the dump is 160 to 200 cisterns, each of which holds between 400 and 500 gallons. The following is a key to the accompanying sketch.
